SOME CURIOSITIES OF THE GRAND ARMY FAIR AT WASHINGTON.

Odd Modes Which Have Been Used for Any Matter of Great Men's Busts in Plain Setting Up—Art Treasures of the Late Presidential Matters.

Special Correspondence.

WASHINGTON, March 5.

MR. LEDRU SESSUM is passing off very quietly at Washington. Mrs. Cleveland has returned home for Florida rest, and she has spent much of her leisure in driving during the pleasant weather which the spring always brings here. Oak View, her country home, is still closed, but the ladies look forward to [illegible] Cleveland gave $25 to the [illegible] and the fair is one of the leading [illegible] of the season. A number of the [illegible] contributed dolls, and the disgal-

[illegible] Miss [illegible] of Dakota, [illegible] Governor Washington [illegible] Senator Sanford, of Alaska; the [illegible] Martin, of Kansas, and the [illegible] Governor Jackson, of Maryland, [illegible] their brains and paid a stake [illegible] dolls for this occasion.

"Ulysses S. Grant, Jr., is a very bright young man. He has many of the qualities of his father, and he has business ability, too. He will be of use to us in many ways, and he has taken some stock in the magazine company. He will act as our certain agent as attorney for the company, and will do active work for us. The Cosmopolitan is booming, and we have doubled our circulation since we moved from Rochester to New York."

The Cosmopolitan is the first magazine in the United States to attempt colored illustrations. It had last month pictures of the ballet in Paris illustrated in colors, and it will shortly, I am told, have a similarly illustrated article on the Metropolitan opera in New York. [illegible] has been paying [illegible] per [illegible] for [illegible] articles, and has [illegible] a [illegible] per [illegible] for [illegible] stories. [illegible] has furnished a [illegible] with a beautiful blue dress and [illegible] and gold lace. The [illegible] Washington have fallen especially [illegible] the fall, and I saw a score of [illegible] before yesterday and [illegible] spots. It's too sweet [illegible] with some of [illegible], and [illegible] to see me double [illegible] at the [illegible] of the governor [illegible] with [illegible] to [illegible] [illegible] Cleveland is looking remarkably well, notwithstanding the hard work which [illegible]

Senator Palmer has fitted up a [illegible] beautiful pictures and some of the antique paintings of Mrs. Gen. Sickles can be seen. Miss Ordway, [illegible] charge of the art rooms, and she is assisted by Mrs. Senator Thomas, Mrs. Senator Teller, Mrs. Senator Palmer and Mrs. Senator Sabin.

The great thing, however, about the Washington fairs is the eating. You are asked to vote for the most popular Irish school girl, the most popular senator's daughter, the most popular senate page, the most popular presidential candidate, and the second term expires [illegible] Hancock [illegible] for presidential candidate in this case is to get a gold headed cane, and it is generally [illegible] that some jolly good fellow, who has no chance of getting to the White House, or who has of getting to the moon, will get it. Ingalls and Allison are each said to be [illegible] on the ground buying votes for themselves, but I think that is very doubtful. The fair promises to be a great success. Hundreds are to partake a relief fund for the widows and orphans and destitute members of the Grand Army and to assist in furnishing of the Grand Army hall here, which is to really a national affair.

In the meantime society is quiet on in the same old way, and president making is [illegible] quietly worked up for the race. The [illegible] politicians have established a big headquarters here, and they [illegible] night after night. The Democrats are by no means [illegible] and I may [illegible] presidential gossip on every street corner. President Cleveland's friends have no doubt of his nomination, and there has not been a very radical change in the Republican atmosphere since Blaine's letter.

I say Mr. Soulsbury, the founder of The Cosmopolitan Magazine, in New York, and asked him as to the connection of Grant's son with his magazine. He replied:

"Ulysses S. Grant, Jr., is a very bright young man. He has many of the qualities of his father, and he has business ability, too. He will be of use to us in many ways, and he has taken some stock in the magazine company. He will act as our certain agent as attorney for the company, and will do active work for us. Manager of the GAZETTE.

Our dispatches this morning would seem to indicate that the "Burlington paralysis" is not spreading.

The democratic state treasurer of Kentucky, who has filled the office for the past twenty years, has been found to be a defaulter. He was known as "Old Honest Dick Tate." But the democrats still cry "Turn the republican rascals out."

The New York Tribune thinks that the Randall tariff bill will derive its support from those democrats who are unwilling to join in what it is pleased to term the onslaught on American industries. It will now remain for some republican who believes in a reduction of the surplus and in genuine tariff reform to introduce a measure which those republicans will support who are not in favor of our taxing the people $100,000,000 annually.

The Burlington strike is practically over. It has all the men it needs. Some roads are still declining to take Burlington freight, but this cannot last long. Public sentiment is too strong against such revolutionary proceedings and the engineers must yield. The effect of the strike can now be measured. Many Burlington engineers have built homes along the line. These they must give up to get employment on other roads. These engineers or the brotherhood have lost a month's labor. Hundreds of other working men have also been out of work because of the strike. Many shippers have been put to inconvenience. Railroads which have declined Burlington cars will have $3000 to pay for each car declined. The Burlington line has lost in earnings. The only good result is a negative one. The engineers have failed to establish the principle that pay should not be graded by experience, responsibility, skill and industry.

No man has risen so rapidly and fallen so suddenly in the world's notice as General Boulanger. Less than a year ago he was the central figure of the French republic. The enthusiastic populace saw in him a second Bonaparte who was to bring back the lost prestige of French arms and regain possession of Alsace and Lorraine. Boulanger was unable to bear the honors which the people would have forced upon him, and fondly imagined that he was indeed to be as great as the victor of Austerlitz and Marengo. He even ventured to assume dictatorial power. But fortunately for France she had wise men at the helm of state, and Boulanger was deprived of his power, banished from the capital, and his overthrow has been made final and complete. The ability of the French government to meet this emergency is a striking instance of the permanency and stability of its republican institutions.

The news of the death of Mr. C. F. R. Hayward, the managing editor of the Denver Republican, has been received with profound sorrow throughout the state. His death was peculiarly sad because of the splendid promise of his life. He had youth, strength, ability and a great opportunity. Though not prominent in Colorado journalism until within the last few years, he had come by general consent to be regarded as at the head of his profession. Some of his contemporaries might surpass him in some special work, but no one could do so much good work in so many departments of journalism. He was very young when he stepped into his high position, and only in his thirtieth year when he died. He had grown steadily in public estimation and respect, and no man in this state was more certain of a great and honorable career. His short life had been full of triumphs won by his ability, honesty and industry. Starting out in life at the age of thirteen with a meagre education and with the pay of three dollars a week as an office boy, he was at the head of his profession in this state when barely twenty-five. No favoritism, no strong backing aided him. He did not have genius, which sometimes brings quick promotion, but even what would ordinarily be termed brilliancy. But he had sturdier qualities which would usually make success more certain, though less early. Of his personal character too high praise cannot be written. He was incapable of doing a mean thing, and therefore had a moral vigor. He was a manly courteous and considerate of his subordinates, and therefore had their warm regard as well as respect. His bearing was always dignified and manly. His extraordinary success never turned his head. He had great moral courage and never flinched from any contest when sure of the righteousness of his cause. In his death Colorado journalism loses its most promising member.

THE BIG TRUSTS.

Work of the New York Legislature in Investigating Them.

The New York legislature has been doing, in a techn ical way, what the congress of the United States is soon to do—namely, investigating the trusts. A committee of seven, appointed by the state senate, has overhauled such corporations as had pillaged in New York, and while they have had a good deal of fun and worried some big enterprisers considerably, they have only discovered enough to whet the public curiosity about trusts.

And what is a trust?

Well, it may be briefly defined as a comprehensive incorporation of big corporations—a sort of "E Pluribus Unum" incorporation, one made by combining many. This, when experience shows that unrestricted competition has reduced the price of the product to a point too low to meet the benevolent views of the producers the big firms combine and appoint trustees who manage the general business of the entire trust, decide how much shall be produced and what it shall sell at, and generally prevent that condition so alarming to a certain school of economists, and known popularly as "over production." If, as sometimes happens, certain firms refuse to "go into the trust," the big corporation proceeds to crush them by various processes, such as controlling the lines of distribution, compelling small dealers to refuse to trade with the rebels, etc. It is no slander to say that these things are not done in the general interest of consumers; and it is certainly very natural that the people, through their representatives, should order an investigation. Hence the late New York proceedings. Hence, also, certain very worthy gentlemen and themselves objects of great public interest.

At the head of these we may safely place Col. John E. Parsons, the able lawyer, attached for the trusts, who drafted most of their arguments and appeared for them before the committee; and Col. Bliss, attorney for the municipalities. Other attorneys who appeared in the case were Messrs. Choate, Dodd and Camp for the Standard Oil company. The chief figures among the trustees were John D. Rockefeller, of the Standard Oil, and his associates, T. Havemeyer, of New York, and W. S. Warner, of Philadelphia.

The investigation threw light on some tolerably extensive combinations. The sugar trust, the cotton oil trust, the oilcloth trust, the lead trust, and many minor combinations were shown to exist and other decisions. But at the head of all, and the mother of all the trusts, is the great Standard Oil combine, with a capital (as a trust) of $70,000,000. In it are to be found Rockefeller, Flagler & Co., of Cleveland, the Pratts, of Brooklyn, New York, and a host of wealthy, buying and selling firms, with the Standard Oil company at the head. Each of these firms thought it was doing a very shrewd thing when it went into the combination for only a few hundred thousand dollars, and the small firms in some instances raised a cry which Col. Bliss cross questioned and forced the exhibitors to explain.

Nothing, it must be remembered, was known of the Standard Oil, with a capital of $25,000,000, full half the total capital of the trust, only paid 6 per cent., putting in 94 per cent. of its product. This is only one of many points on which the public curiosity is whetted rather than gratified.

The Standard Oil men appealed to been [illegible] chiefly on the fact that their combination had not raised the price of oil to the consumer; but several other witnesses had to admit a marked advance in prices after the combine, though, as they claimed, not in consequence of it. The fact was also made prominent that the Standard Oil trust had by a judicious division of its patronage, secured enormous reductions on freight; and one witness "was of opinion" that in eighteen months the company had received $10,000,000 in rebates—but, he added, with an air very like sadness, "the interstate commerce law has put an end to that." We have only presented facts enough to illustrate our main statement, that Mr. Bliss and his colleagues only did enough to convince the people that much more ought to be done; and the committee stopped just as it was in danger of becoming mighty interesting.

Recalling Egyptian History.

Certain citizens of Denver, Colo., are excited over the discovery in remote section of their state of sandstone of the same kind which was used in the erection of the Egyptian pyramids. Hitherto the only thing in Colorado likely to recall the civilization of ancient Egypt has been a Pharaoh bank.—New York World.

A striking instance of the prosperity of the south is shown by the fact that since 1880 its corn acreage has increased 5,600,000 acres or one half of the entire acreage of corn since then.

The Philadelphia Press warns western towns from contributing anything to the relief of sufferers by the New York blizzard. It says that the money so contributed might be turned into the Grant monument fund.

We publish this morning a very interesting communication from City Clerk McCreery. The question of an increased water supply for the city is one of primary importance, and one in which every citizen should be interested.

It is reported that the minister to England, Mr. Phelps, has become disgusted with the administration, and is coming to this country to resign. The country, however, will not be sorry, for it became disgusted with Mr. Phelps almost as soon as he began to discharge his official duties.

The republican convention of Iowa yesterday formally indorsed Senator W. B. Allison as a candidate for the presidency. His course in the senate has been distinguished by a firm devotion to the principles of the republican party. He has also taken a very prominent part in all matters of general legislation. He would make a strong candidate.

"The Brotherhood," says the Philadelphia Press, "cannot possibly succeed in their efforts to compel the railroad companies to violate the law and join them in boycotting railroads with which the engineers are at war. Considerations of convenience may prompt some companies to go as far as they can in order to avert a contest with their engineers, but both the law of the land and the instinct of self-preservation will prevent railroad companies from making the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers an omnipotent force by aiding them to coerce the roads against which the brotherhood see fit to declare war."

An officer of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers at Kansas City recently boasted that the organization had now on hand funds amounting to $900,000 which can be employed in the present strike. He also stated that it could compete with any railroad organization, and that it had a reserve "fighting capital" of $4,610,000. In the face of these figures it is hard to believe that these are the men who are ground down by soulless corporations, and who are only receiving mere pittances for their labor. Prudent men would hesitate in entering on a struggle which would deplete these accumulated resources, particularly when it has so few reasons of justification as in the Burlington strike. Mr. Arthur, chief of the brotherhood, not long ago declared that "strikes mean assessments, and assessments mean death." The brotherhood seem to have adopted a course which will lead to an early dissolution.

How to Get Water.

To the Editor of the Gazette:

The prevailing opinion of many of our citizens seems to be that the water supply for hydrant purposes should be increased at once, and that the people may more thoroughly understand the situation relative to the cost of increasing our supply and cost of maintaining our water system, perhaps the following would not be amiss. In the first place our present water system is not a burden on the people but a source of revenue, as our receipts from water tax alone for the municipal year just closing will be $9,000 in excess of all interest and expense of running the works, so there could be no objection to increasing our supply on account of the burden imposed upon the tax payers. The way of increasing this supply is the question to solve. It seems to me the most feasible plan would be to begin at our new settler above the Iron Springs hotel at Manitou and lay say a ten-inch main along the county road to this city, to where it would connect with our sixteen-inch main on West Huerfano street. By doing this we would avoid all expense of further dams or settlers and have a direct supply to the city, and all surplus water would then discharge into the two reservoirs through the ten and sixteen-inch mains now laid. Estimating this distance to be six miles, at present prices, this ten-inch pipe could be laid at a cost not to exceed sixty thousand dollars, for a 12 inch about $15,000 additional. If this should be done it would increase our interest debt by $3,000 per year, counting our bonds at 6 per cent, so that our water works system would still be a paying investment by $5,000 or $6,000 per year. As matters now stand our city is water, more water, and it does seem foolish to think of putting in a sewerage system for our city with the expectation of having water to supply it with when already the irrigation being done daily draws the water to within three feet of the bottom of the reservoir. Perhaps there is no question but what the sewerage system is badly needed, but if we have to have one without the other I should think by all means we should have the water first, for everyone knows what the sewerage system would amount to without water.

H. C. McCREERY.

JAMES REDPATH.

SKETCH OF THE LIFE AND WORK OF A GREAT LIBERAL LIGHT.

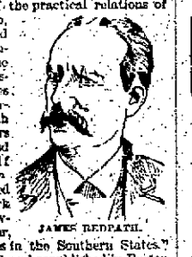
For More Than Three Decades This Sturdy Soul Has Fought for What He Has Thought to Be Right and Just as Between Man and Man.

For more than thirty years James Redpath has patiently investigated all the problems of man's nature and destiny as a social being, and has fearlessly given his radical conclusions to the world.

In all that time he has been on the side of the people as against privilege, of the slave against oppression and of struggling patriots alike in Ireland, Italy and Russia, Cuba and the United States.

Whatever may be the final judgment of mankind on his most "advanced social theories," it is unanimously conceded that he examined subjects diligently and wrote fearlessly. He was never, apparently, without hope; he seemed never to doubt that the larger liberty he advocated for this or that class or race would be wisely used and prove for the benefit of all classes and races. In short, he has maintained the broad doctrine that the overthrow of despotism was as good for the despot as for his victim.

Mr. Redpath has at various times been a conspicuous figure. A few years before the war he suddenly came into prominence as a trenchant anti-slavery writer. When the usual charge of the time was made, that he knew too little of the practical relations of master and negro, he boldly accepted the challenge to investigate it; he traversed the districts where slaves were most numerous, talked with men of both colors and all classes, and fortified himself with minute data. The result appeared in 1859 in a work entitled, "The Roving Editor; or, Talks with Slaves in the Southern States." This was enlarged and republished in Boston in 1860, and had much influence in molding public opinion in the north. In 1859, also, he assisted in preparing an elaborate "Handbook to Kansas Territory," to aid in the settling of that long disputed region. Not long after his enthusiasm led him to join the ill-advised movement of John Brown. All the facts of his connection with that wild raid are not yet known; but it is certain that he sympathized fully with the movement, and, like Brown, was fanatic enough to believe that an insurrection could be excited and be successful in the mountains of Virginia—a region where slavery probably assumed a milder form than in any other section, where if anywhere it was truly patriarchal, where whites outnumbered blacks, six or four to one and the military force of the state and United States could be concentrated in a few hours. He took the sword, but did not perish by the sword; he was absent on mission when the attack was made, and the matter involved no harm for him from a few months' seclusion.



JAMES REDPATH.

The next year he wrote and published "Echoes of Capt. John Brown," and followed it with other articles and pamphlets on the subject, and in London in 1860 published "John Brown, the Hero of Harper's Ferry." These works, widely circulated in the north at the time of the civil war were largely instrumental in [illegible] sentiment of hostility to slavery and about the [illegible] of Brown, and in time became [illegible] object of admiration and worship. Of course this could not endure, and later reaction, since reaction died away, have led the people to a very different view of the Brown Raid."

Mr. Redpath took up the idea, very prevalent for some years, that the West Indies would furnish the colored people a point of national development, and wrote a "Guide to Hayti." He also wrote and talked much on social reform and the struggles for liberty and national unity in Italy, France and Germany. Soon after the war he organized the Redpath Lecture bureau, which was for some years a decided success. He then returned to journalism, more radical than ever. The case of Ireland interested him, and he remained many months in that island, corresponding with American papers and dealing out most trenchant criticisms of the British government. On his return to the United States he set up a regular Irish Patriot Literary bureau, and devoted all his time and talents to enlightening Americans on the character of the Irish people and their grievances. Not content with the political issues, he attacked the British writers on historical and ethnological grounds. He ridiculed the current idea that the English are an Anglo-Saxon nation; presented facts to prove that the Celts (original Britons) were neither exiled nor exterminated, and urged the conclusion that the basis of British and American character is essentially Celtic. In short, carrying all his old enthusiasm into their defense, he became, as the old saying had it, more Irish than the Irish themselves."

Soon after he became involved in the discussion of moral and social questions connected with so called liberal religion, which did not add anything to his reputation. Overwork produced exhaustion; he disappeared from journalism and was believed to be in perfect seclusion in the West Indies. Soon, however, he reappeared, secure and radical as ever. At length he became one of the editors of The North American Review, and worked so incessantly for a year or two that brain exhaustion resulted. Early in 1887 it was announced that his situation was precarious; but he was literally compelled to abandon his work, and a long rest brought partial restoration. It was only partial, however; the mental machine had suffered too long and too severe a strain, and the opening days of 1888 found him completely prostrated. He is now, however, convalescent.

Mr. Redpath's personal history is romantic. He was born Aug. 23, 1833, at Berwick-on-Tweed, that ancient town so long in dispute between England and Scotland. Until quite a recent period acts of the British parliament specified that they were to be in force in "the kingdom of England, Scotland and Ireland, the principality of Wales and the town of Berwick-on-Tweed." Mr. Redpath says: "I was born without a country and forged one for myself."

His father moved to the United States in 1849 and settled in the backwoods of Michigan; soon after James left home and worked as a printer in various western cities, finally locating in New York. At the age of 19 he was a regular writer for The New York Tribune, a colleague of such men as Greeley and Dana. Taking a vacation on account of his weak eyes, he made his tour of the gulf and south Atlantic states; then went to Kansas as correspondent of The St. Louis Globe Democrat. His letters on the struggle there were widely read and copied. After that the war, the lecture bureau and the Irish question employed his energies.

Though a very radical reformer, Mr. Redpath maintains that all needed changes can be made by votes in the method prescribed by the Constitution of the United States. Only once in his life has he consented to the use of force—in the John Brown raid—and he is the uncompromising opponent of all such schemes as those of the Anarchists. He is, in short, a radical reformer without being in the least a revolutionist. J. B. HARRIS.
